Every child needs friendship, family, and fun to thrive. These three elements help children develop socially, emotionally, and intellectually. They also help children learn how to cope with stress and adversity.

Friendship

Friendships are important for children of all ages. They provide children with a sense of belonging and support. Friends can help children learn how to cooperate, share, and resolve conflict. They can also provide a safe space for children to express their emotions and try new things.

Here are some of the benefits of friendship for children:
