The Freemasons

The Freemasons are a fraternal organization that traces its roots back to the Middle Ages. The organization is based on the principles of brotherly love, relief, and truth. Freemasons are known for their charitable work and their support of education. The organization has been accused of being a secret society, but Freemasons deny this claim. They say that their organization is open to anyone who believes in their principles.

The Founding Fathers

Many of the Founding Fathers were Freemasons. George Washington was a Master Mason and served as the first Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Virginia. Benjamin Franklin was also a Freemason and served as the first Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania. John Hancock was a Freemason and served as the first President of the Continental Congress.

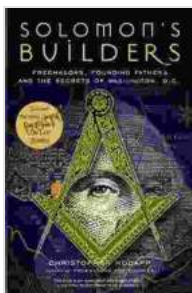

The Influence of the Freemasons

The Freemasons' influence can be seen in the design of Washington, D.C. The city was laid out by Pierre Charles L'Enfant, a French Freemason. L'Enfant incorporated Masonic symbols into the design of the city, including the square and compass, the all-seeing eye, and the pyramid. The Freemasons' influence can also be seen in the symbolism used on American currency. The dollar bill features the all-seeing eye and the pyramid, both of which are Masonic symbols. The Freemasons have been accused of being a secret society that controls the world. However, there is no evidence to support this claim. The Freemasons are a fraternal organization that is dedicated to charity and education. The Founding Fathers were Freemasons, and their influence can be seen in the design of Washington, D.C., and in the symbolism used on American currency.

The Secrets of Washington

There are many legends and rumors about the secrets of Washington, D.C. Some people believe that the city is built on a ley line, or a line of energy that connects sacred sites around the world. Others believe that the city is home to a secret underground society. There is no evidence to support these claims, but they continue to fascinate people around the world.
