

Logical Reasoning PrepTest 47 (LSAT Explained Logical Reasoning PrepTest 20)

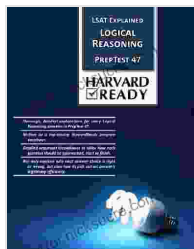

: Understanding Logical Reasoning in the LSAT

The Logical Reasoning section of the Law School Admission Test (LSAT) is a critical component designed to assess your ability to analyze and evaluate arguments. It requires you to identify the main points, premises, and conclusions of an argument, as well as the relationships between them. Logical Reasoning PrepTest 47 question 20 provides an excellent example of the types of questions you can expect to encounter on this section.

Question 20:

Passage:

"The ability to distinguish between right and wrong is a necessary precondition for true freedom. Therefore, true freedom is not possible without the ability to distinguish between right and wrong."

Question:

Which of the following is the best restatement of the main point of the passage?

(A) The ability to distinguish between right and wrong is the most important prerequisite for true freedom. (B) The ability to distinguish between right and wrong is not sufficient for true freedom. (C) True freedom requires the ability to distinguish between right and wrong. (D) True freedom is impossible without the ability to distinguish between right and wrong. (E) The ability to distinguish between right and wrong is a consequence of true freedom.

Step-by-Step Explanation and Analysis:

Step 1: Identify the Main Points and Structure of the Argument

The passage presents a straightforward argument with a single main point. The first sentence states that the ability to distinguish between right and wrong is a necessary condition for true freedom. The second sentence follows logically from the first and states that true freedom is not possible without the ability to distinguish between right and wrong.

Step 2: Determine the Relationship Between the Main Points

The relationship between the two sentences is a logical connection, specifically a conditional statement. The first sentence sets up the premise that if you have the ability to distinguish between right and wrong, then you have true freedom. The second sentence asserts that the converse is also true: if you do not have the ability to distinguish between right and wrong, then you cannot have true freedom.

Step 3: Restate the Ma

The question asks for a restatement of the ma of the passage. The ma is that true freedom is not possible without the ability to distinguish between right and wrong. Option (D) accurately restates this by stating that "True freedom is impossible without the ability to distinguish between right and wrong."

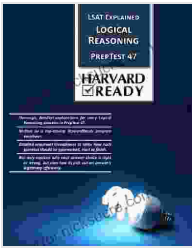

Therefore, the correct answer is (D).

Additional Tips for Answering Logical Reasoning Questions:

- Read the passage carefully and identify the main points and structure of the argument.
- Understand the logical connections between the premises and the .
- Consider the possible restatements of the ma and choose the one that most accurately captures the author's intent.
- Eliminate answer choices that are not consistent with the argument or that introduce new information.
- Pay attention to negations and conditional statements, as these can affect the meaning of the argument.
